

We are...secure

Allied Express customers can be confident that all steps are in place to protect valuable stock from theft or loss while in our hands. If your products are deemed as 'high-security' your freight will be flagged the instant it is scanned and enters the system.

Once it arrives at the depot, security freight comes under the direct attention of the depot manager. It is scanned off, logged and visually verified by supervisory-level staff prior to being consolidated for delivery. Any freight that is not immediately loaded is locked in a fully-enclosed cage.

When it is finally scanned onto the delivery vehicle, the driver is alerted to the freight's 'security status' and takes particular care that the goods loaded exactly match the final delivery manifest. All products are again scanned at the point of delivery and this information is then immediately uploaded to the system.

No matter where your products are in the delivery cycle; at pick-up, in transit or delivered, each is tracked, reconciled and its progress able to be viewed on our website.

Our warehousing and distribution facilities are under 24 hour video surveillance. Visitors are signed in through the main office and issued identity tags before being escorted into the warehouse.

Allied drivers know that they are personally responsible for what they carry so particular care is taken that every item is accounted for. At Allied, we make it the personal responsibility of drivers and staff to ensure that all security procedures are observed and followed without exception and that your freight ends up where it's meant to be and in the right hands every time.
